Introduction

The Weekly Assessment is designed to assess your students’ mastery of the skills taught throughout the week. The test includes questions that cover the following areas:
  - Vocabulary Strategies
  - Reading Comprehension: Strategies and Skills
  - Grammar, Mechanics, and Usage
  - Spelling

Purpose of the Weekly Assessment

Each week, there will be a new passage for students to read. The passage will be either fiction or nonfiction, depending on the genre of the core selection for the week.

The passage will be followed by twelve questions that cover the skills for the week.

Providing students with a new read allows you to assess how well students have mastered the skills for the week. When students apply what they have learned, you can evaluate the degree of mastery they have achieved.

Leveled Weekly Assessment

The passage on the Weekly Assessment may be difficult for the approaching level reader to master on a cold read. For this reason, we have provided an alternate assessment for you to administer to these students on weeks one, three, and five of each unit. The passage is at the same level of difficulty as the Approaching Leveled Readers. Students taking the leveled assessment can then apply the skills they have learned to text that is at a more appropriate instructional level. This will allow you to evaluate how well all students have mastered the skills for the week.

Using the Results to Inform Instruction

Use the results of the Weekly Assessment as a formative assessment tool to help monitor student progress. Information gathered by evaluating the results of this assessment can also be used to diagnose specific strengths and weaknesses of your students. If scores from the Weekly Assessments are used to help determine report card grades, then you can consider this a summative assessment as well.
Administering the Weekly Assessment

Each Weekly Assessment consists of eleven multiple-choice questions, and one constructed-response question. The format and length of the test is the same each week. You may want to explain each section of the test to students the first time you administer it.

• For the multiple-choice questions, students should fill in the circle next to the best answer. Remind students to fill in the circle completely for each answer on the test.
• For the constructed-response question, students should write their answers in the space provided on the page. If you are using the separate Answer Sheet, then direct students to write their answers on the back of the Answer Sheet.

The assessment should take approximately 20 minutes.

The Answer Sheet can be found on page 399.

The Answer Key to score the tests can be found on pages 390–398.

Directions: Say: Write your name and the date on the cover of your test booklet. (Or at the top of the Answer Sheet.) When all students are done, say: Open the booklet to page 2. You will read a passage. Then carefully read the questions that follow. For each multiple-choice question, read all four of the answer choices. Then fill in the circle next to the best answer. For the constructed-response question, write your answer in the space provided on the page. When you finish the last question, close your booklet and put your pencil down. You may begin now.

General Procedures

Before the test: Distribute copies of the Weekly Assessment and an Answer Sheet if you choose to use one.

During the test: Monitor students’ test-taking behavior to make sure that each student is following the directions and writing responses in the correct places. Answer questions about procedures and materials, but do not help them answer the test questions.

After the test: Before collecting the papers, make sure that students have written their names on the cover of the test booklet or at the top of the Answer Sheet and any additional sheets of paper.

Singing Out

Nina Martinez trudged up the steps to the second floor. She felt nervous this morning. Why had she decided to try out for the talent show? She loved to sing. But she did not enjoy singing in front of other people.

The music room was filled with laughing children. There were Luz and James. There were others from her class, too. The bright, sunny room left no place to hide. A few teachers sat on folding chairs. They waited for the children to settle down. There was the stage, cold and bare.

“Hi, Nina!” Luz called out. “I didn’t think you would try out. You are so shy.”

“That’s nonsense,” Nina said. “I’m not shy at all.”

Luz chuckled. She ran off to find a seat. Nina followed, dragging her feet. She wished she were downstairs in her classroom. What had she gotten herself into?

One by one the students got up and did their acts.

“Nina Martinez!” someone said. It was Mrs. Brent, the music teacher.

Nina rose from her chair. She walked to the huge, empty stage. Her face was hot, and her hands were as cold as ice. She fumbled with the sheet music of her favorite song, but the words would not come out.

“I—I—” Nina began. Then she stopped. “I can’t,” she said softly.

“Close your eyes. Pretend you are alone.” said Mrs. Brent.

“Forget about everyone else. Just sing.”

Nina felt silly, but she gave it a try. She shut her eyes. She raised her voice and sang out. The song poured out like honey from a jar.

Mrs. Brent clapped. “That’s the first time I have really heard your voice,” she said. “You are in the show!”

Going Home

Roberto stood by the gate and waited for his grandpa to find the ticket and his passport. People hurried this way and that in the crowded airport. It was Roberto’s first time in an airport. Never before had he been on a plane. It took many hours to fly from Italy to the United States, and Grandpa would not be coming with him. How quickly life could change!

“My boy,” Grandpa said gently, “you will enjoy life in California. You’ll make so many new friends. How delighted your father will be to have you with him again!”

“I do not want to leave you!” cried Roberto. “Look at this airport! I will get lost without you. That is what will happen to me in California.” He hated the airport. Everyone here seemed unhappy. All around him were mothers with crying babies in their arms. People were rushing around with faces that were tight with worry. Roberto thought of the brown cows on the farm back home and of the white chickens that scratched in the earth. This morning Roberto had eaten his last egg from those chickens and his last pear from the old tree in the yard.

The crackle of a speaker above them made Roberto jump at the sharp sound. A voice from the speaker announced that it was time for Roberto to board the plane. Grandpa squeezed Roberto tightly. He said, “Go. When you are unhappy, look in this envelope.”

The plane soared up and away. Roberto glanced at the starry sky as the world grew dark. He opened the envelope as he wiped away a tear. Inside was a photograph of a smiling Grandpa. His hat was pushed back on his head. There was his old stone house, too. Roberto smiled. He would write his grandpa a letter as soon as he arrived at his new home.

City Gardeners

Open space is rare in the city, and people who live in apartments do not have lawns or land. Some people have planted gardens in empty lots in the city. Little pockets of green dot the cold, gray cement. Tomatoes, green beans, and colorful flowers grow here. Roses climb up the brick walls. These gardens do not belong to any one person. They belong to the whole neighborhood. A child may play among the rows of sweet peas. A jogger may sit for awhile on a bench. People feel welcome there.

Something special is growing in these places. It is friendship. People of all ages come together to help keep their city green. As they take care of the garden, they also learn about each other. The gardeners find that they have things in common. Friendships are formed, and the friends look out for each other. That makes the streets safer for everyone.

Some people have other plans for the open space. They want to put up tall buildings where the gardens are planted. But the gardeners do not want to give up their gardens. They want the city to stay green.

The gardeners are not content to let their work die, so they are fighting to save the gardens. One way of addressing the problem is to write letters to city leaders telling about why the gardens are needed. Sometimes the buildings go up anyway. As a last resort, the gardeners may refuse to leave their gardens to let the building begin. They can often delay the building for a long time.

City Gardeners

Open space is rare in the city. Most homes do not have backyards. So some people plant gardens in empty lots in the city. Little pockets of green dot the cold gray streets. Tomatoes, green beans, and bright flowers grow in these places. Roses climb up the brick walls.

These gardens do not belong to any one person. They are for the whole neighborhood. All people are welcome here.

Something special grows in these places. It is friendship. People of all ages meet to help keep their city green. They can become friends and look out for each other. That makes the streets safer.

But some people have other plans for the open space. They want to put up tall buildings in place of the gardens. But the gardeners do not want to give up what they have made. They want the city to stay green.

The gardeners are not content to let the gardens die. They fight back in their own ways. One way of addressing the problem is to tell city leaders why the gardens are needed. The buildings may go up anyway. As a last resort, people may block the workers who try to tear down the gardens. That can stop the building plans for a long time.
Directions: Fill in the circle next to the best answer.

Life in the Cold

Picture a place where nobody lives. This place is covered by an ice sheet. The weather is always below freezing. Fierce wind whips over the packed ice. This is Antarctica, the coldest place on Earth.

It does not look like a desert, but it is. Deserts are places with very little water. Less than two inches of snow fall each year in Antarctica. The water is frozen into ice, so no plants can grow there.

The dry cold is very hard on living things. But some kinds of animals seem made for the cold. Antarctica is home to penguins, seals, and whales. Each animal has something special that keeps it warm and helps it to find food.

Penguins have ways of staying warm. Soft feathers called down protect them. These feathers keep the warmer air close to their skin. A thick layer of fat helps, too. They huddle together for warmth. These birds cannot fly. A penguin shuffles along over the ice but is a good swimmer. It catches fish in the icy waters.

Seals have flippers that help them swim in the freezing water. The Antarctic waters are rich in food, and seals are good hunters. Like penguins, seals have a layer of fat to keep them warm. This fat is called blubber.

Some whales swim in the Antarctic waters. They feed on shrimp, crabs, and other small sea animals. Whales also have blubber to keep them warm. Whales are mammals. They must come up above the waves to breathe air. Sometimes a whale gets trapped under the ice. This is a danger because then the whale cannot reach the air.

It is hard to picture a place where it is always winter. Ice stretches out for miles and miles. But the animals who live there do not seem to mind it at all!
Directions: Fill in the circle next to the best answer.

1. Choose the word that means the same as shuffles in the sentence below.
   The baby penguin shuffles its feet.
   A  hops  C  lifts

A Visitor in the Garden

One April day Danny Kemp went out to his mother’s garden. Mrs. Kemp was very proud of that garden. Danny was picking a perfect tomato from a vine when he saw something hop away. It hopped right into the lettuce patch.

In the lettuce was a small, white rabbit that was eating Danny’s mother’s vegetables. “Uh oh,” Danny said. The rabbit gazed at Danny. He had little pink eyes, was cute, and seemed friendly. Danny scooped the rabbit up in his arms and brought it inside.

“Where did a tame rabbit come from?” Mrs. Kemp asked.

“And how did he manage to find us?”

“He likes your garden,” Danny said. “This bunny certainly has a healthy appetite.”

“I just hope he did not eat up too many of my plants,” said his mother. “Why don’t you keep him as a pet?”

Danny gave his new pet, Snowy, fresh water and food. He let Snowy run around the house for an hour each day to satisfy his pet’s need for exercise.

But Snowy, like most rabbits, liked to nibble on things. He ate the telephone cord and he chewed on shoes. He left a deep scratch on one chair. One day Snowy ate a button. He was lucky he did not get sick. Keeping him out of trouble was a challenge, and Danny began to worry that he would have to give Snowy away.

A few days passed, and Snowy did not do anything too bad. Then Mrs. Kemp said, “You can keep the rabbit, but he cannot run around or eat up the garden or scratch the chairs. I will help you build a big pen for him.”

After that, things were much better.

The Thanksgiving Play

Mrs. Cook was worried about the Thanksgiving play. The third-graders were having trouble. On Monday Julie said that she did not want to play the part of the mother.

“All I get to do is stir the soup pot,” she said crossly. “And then I just tell everyone to enjoy the meal.”

“But you are doing an important job,” Mrs. Cook said. She had just been securing a paper pumpkin to the window. “You’re in charge of making the feast.” She was already tired of November.

“And I don’t want to be a Pilgrim!” shouted Mark.

Everyone else started to argue. Even the weakest voice was raised. Mrs. Cook put her hands over her ears. “Children! We have a play to put on. We have to work together.”

“This is a boring play,” Kea said. “Everybody knows the Thanksgiving story, anyway.”

Mrs. Cook pointed out, “Thanksgiving is the time we give thanks for all we have.”

Tariq said, “Let’s write a new play! It can be set in today’s times. We can each write our own lines.”

“We can still have a feast, though. While we eat we can talk about what is important to us,” added Karen. “We can say what we give thanks for.”

“I give thanks for snowy days,” said one student.
“I give thanks for my little brother,” said another.
“Write it all down,” Mrs. Cook said.

So the third-graders got busy writing. Then they practiced their lines happily.

Wednesday was the day of the play. After they had decorated the stage with symbols of the holiday, the children stood behind the curtain.

“Places, everyone,” Mrs. Cook whispered.

The room darkened, and the curtain rose. The audience saw a row of smiling faces. The Thanksgiving play was about to begin.

“We can still have a feast, though,” Karen said. “We can say what we give thanks for and eat, too!”

“I give thanks for snow.” Janet laughed, while Paul added, “I give thanks for my brother, Todd.”

“Write down all your thoughts,” Mrs. Cook told them. So the third graders began writing a new play. They took turns saying their lines to get ready.

When the day of the play came, the children decorated the stage with symbols of the holiday. Then they waited behind the curtain.

Lone Wolf

From her warm and cozy bed, Annie heard the wolf howl. She had a passion for reading, but now even she could not concentrate on her book. The howl was bothering her with its lonely sound. It was calling to her for help. Annie closed the book and went downstairs. Her father was looking out the window at the snow.

“Do you hear the wolf?” he asked.

“Yes! He’s asking for our help,” Annie said.

“Don’t be silly,” Dad said. “It must be lost. Wolves live in packs, and sometimes a hunting wolf gets lost. It howls so that the others will hear it, and then it can find its way back to its family.”

In the morning the wolf was in the yard. Annie and Dad watched him closely. There was something splendid about the animal. His shaggy fur was silver gray, and his eyes were yellow. Annie had to admire him. He looked so handsome. She knew he was a prince in wolf’s fur! He had come to talk to her.

“What do wolves eat?” she asked Dad.

“Anything with fur,” he answered. “They mostly eat wild animals.”

Annie’s heart ached for the wolf. What if he did not find his pack soon? That would be dangerous for him. Annie knew that wolves did not hunt alone—they needed the pack. Why had he asked her for help?

By lunchtime the wolf had disappeared, but they could still hear him howling. Then something wonderful happened. The mysterious voices of other wolves began to answer back.

“See? That’s his family,” Dad said. “He’s going to find them soon. He’s a lucky wolf.”

The next day their neighbor, Mr. Nelson, came over. He said, “Say, I saw something wonderful early this morning. A pack of wolves was running along the frozen river!”

Annie wished she had been there. She knew the wolf prince was leading the pack, with his crown sparkling in the sun.

Computers Then and Now

You probably know how to use computers. But who first built these objects? One of the very first was Kenneth H. Olsen. He started by fixing radios in his basement. Later Olsen went to a famous college to learn about building machines.

Olsen was very good at his work. Soon he showed people how to build a computer. This machine was not meant for entertainment. It was a tool for gathering information. Olsen started his own company. The company made the first computers.

Who knew computers would become so important? Bill Gates did! He made some smart predictions. He and his friend Paul Allen worked together. They created a computer program that many people could use. They formed their own company. It was a great success. Most computers today use the company’s programs.

Steve Jobs also loved computers. He wanted to make them cost less. That way, more people could buy them. He and his friend Steve Wozniak started a computer company. It made computers that were easy to use. The company also made a computer mouse that people liked. Today Jobs’s and Wozniak’s machines are sold everywhere.

Michael Dell was born to sell things. He did not build computers. But he found a way to sell them for less money. His company sells computers right to people. This saves people money. They do not have to buy computers at a store. Today, many schools use computers sold by Dell’s company.

All of these men have brought computers to many people. Computers help people work and gather information. They are in many things used every day. Millions of people play computer games. Computers have changed the way people live.

Mysterious Mars

People have always wanted to believe in life on Mars. After all, it is fairly close to Earth. Mars is one of the inner planets, or one of the planets closest to the sun. It is the fourth planet from the sun in our solar system and is easily seen with a telescope. Because it is not hard to see, people are curious about it. Many people have written books about Mars. But what is known about it?

The inner planets are alike in some ways. Along with Earth, Venus, and Mercury, Mars is made of rock. It has just about the same surface area as Earth. Like Earth, it has valleys, hills, and plains. Other farther planets, such as Jupiter, are made of gas. Nothing can live there.

For years people have studied Mars to see if there is life on it. Some scientists report signs of water, and most agree that there was probably water there once. All living things need water. Without it, plants cannot grow and animals cannot exist. The main areas of Mars look like dry stream beds. Water may be hidden under the planet’s ice caps, but frozen water cannot be used for any purpose.

The temperatures on Mars are very cold. That would make life on Mars difficult. Large dust storms sweep the surface and may last for many months. They can cover the whole planet and dim the sunlight. It would be hard to breathe or see in such a bad dust storm.

Yet people are still trying to find life on Mars. A new space program is exploring the planet. Special cameras bring back pictures and information. Now scientists have small samples of matter from the mysterious planet. Tiny things might be able to live in this matter. If that is true, then there is a chance that there is life on Mars.
Directions: Fill in the circle next to the best answer.

1. What signal words let you know the definition of dim is included in this sentence?

   Only dim sunlight reaches the outer planets, which means the planets have dull light.

   - only
   - reaches the
   - which means
   - dull light

2. What does the word temperatures mean in the sentence below?

   On parts of Mars, the temperatures drop so low that they are too cold for living things.

   - surfaces
   - feelings of anger
   - high fevers
   - degrees of heat or cold

3. What does solar system mean in the sentence below?

   Scientists study the sun, the moon, and the planets that make up the solar system to gather information about outer space.

   - the moon and planets that revolve around the sun
   - a system for gathering information
   - a new space program
   - outer space
4. Which statement below BEST summarizes the fourth paragraph?
   A. Mars has bad dust storms that cover the whole planet.
   B. The weather on Mars would make life there difficult.
   C. The planet does not have enough water for plant life.
   D. The temperature on Mars gets very hot.

5. Which statement below BEST summarizes the final paragraph?
   A. All living things need water.
   B. Many people have written books about Mars.
   C. The inner planets are made of rock.
   D. People are still looking for life on Mars.

6. Write a summary of this passage. Include only the most important points in your summary.

Astrid Lindgren, Writer

Do you know Pippi Longstocking? She lives with a horse and a monkey. She is the strongest girl on earth. Pippi takes her friends on adventures, and she is very funny. She makes the best pancakes. There are many stories about Pippi. The Pippi books have been made into movies, too. The girl with red hair is famous.

Astrid Lindgren wrote the Pippi stories. The talented author started out as a reader. She liked books about strong girls. Lindgren thought stories about “proper” children were dull. She wanted to write books about real children. Lindgren wrote the first Pippi book for her own daughter. Karin Lindgren loved the book. It was a success. So her mother wrote more Pippi books.

Lindgren wrote many books for children. None of her characters is boring! She put fun into her books. She got some of her ideas from old folk tales. In these tales children leave home early. They set out to learn about the world. Along the way they meet different people. They also learn about themselves. That is just what Lindgren’s characters do.

Some people thought Lindgren’s books were too exciting. “Why can’t she write about good children?” they asked. But Lindgren had other ideas. She felt excitement was missing from children’s books. She knew that being a child is special. Childhood is when you explore life for the first time. Lindgren once talked about her writing. She said she wanted to help children understand others. In the world of Lindgren’s books all kinds of people find acceptance. They learn about others. These are useful lessons.

Pippi is not always polite. But she teaches us how to live. She tries something new every single day. She makes mistakes. But she makes friends wherever she goes.

The Banquet

In September Mitsuko Kojima moved to the United States. What a change! Japan was so far away. Mitsuko wrote letters to her friends and looked at pictures of her old house. She stared out the window at the strange street below and felt sad.

She missed her old schoolmates, but her new school was okay. The new children were friendly, and the teacher seemed agreeable. Mitsuko spoke some English, and her parents spoke a little, too. “You will learn quickly,” they said. “Children learn more quickly than grownups.”

Her English got better little by little. Mitsuko walked home after school one day and sat down next to her mother.

“What did you have for lunch today?” said her mother.

“A sandwich,” answered Mitsuko.

“Was it good?”

“It was okay.” Mitsuko thought of spicy crab rolls and hot fish soup and delicious tuna with special sauce. Her loneliness got mixed up with the dream of a good meal.

One day her mother said, “I am giving a special banquet. Our neighbors will come, and I’ll ask everyone to bring some food.”

Mrs. Kojima cooked for two days to make all of Mitsuko’s favorite dishes. The house smelled delicious. It smelled like Japan.

The guests brought their favorite dishes. Some brought soups, while others came with roasted chicken. One person brought pizza, and there were sweet potatoes, salads, and pies. All this and more was on the Kojimas’ table. All the guests were talking and laughing. “This is a feast!” they said. “What a good idea Mrs. Kojima had!”

At first Mitsuko could only gaze with curiosity at the table. She was not untrusting, but the food looked odd. Then she put a little food on a plate. She decided to try a bit of everything. A crab roll sat next to a French fry, while a sweet potato snuggled up to pizza. This was a mixed-up meal! They had not eaten like this in Japan. Mitsuko giggled and showed her mother the plate.

“Is it good?” Mrs. Kojima asked.

“Yes, it is good.” Mitsuko smiled.

The Banquet

In the fall, Mitsuko Kojima had moved to the United States. She missed Japan. Mitsuko wrote letters to her friends. She thought a lot about her old home.

The children at the new school were nice, and the teacher seemed agreeable. But Mitsuko had to learn more English words to keep up. Her dad said she would learn fast.

Mitsuko’s English got better over the next few months. One day her mother asked her, “What did you have for lunch today?”

“A sandwich.” Mitsuko said.

“Was it good?”

“It was fine,” Mitsuko said. She thought of crab rolls and hot fish soup. Her sadness got mixed up with the dream of a good meal.

One day her mother said, “I will give a real banquet. The neighbors will come. I will cook all the foods that you like.”

Mrs. Kojima cooked for days. The house smelled like Japan. The guests brought food, too. Some brought bread and others brought yams, greens, soups, and pies. Everyone was happy. “This is a feast!” they said. “What a good thought Mrs. Kojima had!”

At first, Mitsuko could only gaze with curiosity at the table. She was not untrusting, but the food looked odd. Then she thought she would try a bit of this food and that. A crab roll sat next to a French fry while a potato sat next to pizza. This was a mixed up meal! Mitsuko laughed and showed her mother the full plate.

“It is good?” Mrs. Kojima asked.

“Yes, it is good.” Mitsuko smiled.

A Riddle for Jeremy

Jeremy always tried to be the best, no matter what he was doing. He wanted to win the spelling bee. He had to shoot the most baskets. Jeremy needed someone to beat. So he found an enemy in Chris Jones. Although Chris sometimes beat him, Jeremy was not easily discouraged. He just tried harder.

The fact was, Jeremy was not the swiftest runner. But that did not matter when the teacher announced, “We are going to hold a race to raise money for a new computer. People will give money for you to run. You should ask some people to help you. I hope many of you can sign up for this event.”

Jeremy wanted to win badly. At the very least, he wanted to beat Chris. He asked his father to give money in his name. Jeremy observed his father’s raised eyebrow. That meant the answer was no, Jeremy guessed.

Sure enough, Jeremy’s father advised him not to run. “You are running for the wrong reason,” his father said. “You should be running to help your school. Instead, you just want to win. That is not always a suitable reason for doing something.”

“So?” said Jeremy.

“Here is a riddle,” replied his father. “If you run the race and pass the person in second place, what place will you be in?”

“First place,” said Jeremy. His father shook his head.

On the day of the race, it was boiling hot. Sand blew up from the track as the runners prepared to depart. The whistle blew and the race began. Jeremy ran as fast as he could. Sand got in his eyes. People pushed him off the track. Jeremy tried to increase his speed, but the finish line was far away. He gasped for breath. His legs ached. Wearily he pushed on until he passed Chris, who was in second place, yet Jeremy lost the race.

Do you know why?

Seeking a Better Life

Some people live and work in one place. Others move from one country to another. As they move, they look for work. These people are called guest workers. In one place, they may pick lettuce, grapes, or nuts. After the crop is picked, they have no more work. Then they must move to another place. They pick a different crop there. They live and work like this all year long. Many guest workers are not citizens of the United States. They are new to this country.

For many years guest workers in the United States suffered. They had to work long hours. They got low wages. It was hard for them to buy things for their families. They could not change this because they did not have a strong union. Unions are groups of workers. They join together to try to make things better for workers. Unions can help their members preserve some of the things they have already won, such as higher wages. Some guest workers did belong to a union. It was not strong enough to help them. Without a strong union, they had no one to speak up for them.

During the 1960s guest workers picking grapes in California went on strike. A strike means that people stop working until a problem is solved. This became one of the best known strikes in history.

The leaders of the strike asked people not to buy grapes unless they were picked by workers who were in the union. The public listened. Millions of people stopped buying grapes. After a long battle, the guest-workers’ union won. Guest workers finally had a union. It was strong enough to help make their lives better. The union helped restore pride for many guest workers.

At a Coral Reef

It was Jeff’s first time swimming at a coral reef. He was so excited! This year, his class’s annual trip was a visit to Mexico. The trip would have been too expensive for Jeff’s family. But the school was offered a special package rate. Jeff felt as if he had been given a wonderful present all tied up in beautiful wrapping. On the plane, he was so excited he kept walking up and down the aisles. The flight attendant asked him politely to sit down. This trip had the potential to be one he would never forget.

Jeff swam over the reef. He was surprised at how warm the water was. He lived in Maine. There, the ocean was almost always cold. He never went swimming in winter. He thought it was like that everywhere. But it was February, and here in Mexico the water was warm!

It was hard to believe this was all real. Jeff had never seen so many brightly colored fish in one place. And the coral was just as pretty. In some places it was even more colorful than the fish.

Before the trip, Jeff had read books about coral. He learned that most coral is brittle. Rough waves can break it. Jeff knew there were certain things that he was not supposed to do. The other students did not know this. Jeff knew never to stand on coral. That could hurt it. He learned never to take live coral out of the water. That can kill it. He also learned that he never should touch living coral. He could get hurt touching it.

Jeff was glad he had learned about coral before coming here. Now he would not make an innocent mistake that might hurt the coral or hurt him. He could spend all of his time enjoying the fish and the reef!

The Silk Road

Long ago, traders brought silk, spices, and other treasures from the East to the West. They followed the Silk Road. This was the way from China to Turkey and Greece. From there the goods were brought to Western Europe.

Because there were no paved roads or sidewalks, traders had a rough trip through the lonesome lands. The camels and horses that pulled the loads had to be strong. First, traders had to cross over a desert. Then, they crossed over a high mountain range. Once over the mountain, the traders had many hundreds of miles to go before finally reaching Europe. There were many dangers along the way. Robbers, for instance, roamed the land. The robbers knew that the goods the traders carried were worth a fortune.

The Silk Road was not one particular road. There were many ways to travel from the East to the West, and each route led to different trading posts. While some traders traveled by land, some merchants traveled by sea to reach the shores of Europe. Sea crossings also had their dangers. It was a hard way to make a living, but over many years trade blossomed between the East and the West.

Precious silk was something everyone wanted. Making it was hard work. The silkworms had to be tended while they spun the silk threads. Then the silk threads had to be woven into fine material with soft textures. Traders were not allowed to take silkworms outside China. The money made from the silk trade was very important to China’s people. They could not let other people find ways to make silk, because then people might not buy it from China.

Over the centuries many changes came about because of trade on the Silk Road. People learned about new customs, beliefs, and styles of living. Travelers carried stories about faraway lands. They brought back sketches to illustrate what they had seen. People learned about other parts of the world. Trade made the world seem smaller.

Green Juice?

Every night someone else in the family made the juice the Willets had with dinner. Tonight was Eddie’s turn, and he decided to surprise everyone by making something they had never seen — green juice.

His sister Marcy could not believe he was doing this. “Have you lost your marbles?” she asked, staring at him with her mouth open.

“No,” he told her. “I have all the ingredients ready. All I have to do is follow one of these recipes that I found in a magazine.”

“I don’t want to drink green juice,” Marcy frowned.

“How do you know it won’t be very tasty?” Eddie asked.

“Juice is supposed to be orange, or purple, or red,” Marcy replied.

“This will be something new, and new things are fun.”

“I don’t like to eat new things,” Marcy grumbled as she left the kitchen. If Eddie was determined to do this, she was not going to stand there and watch him!

When Marcy returned to the kitchen later, Eddie had finished making the juice. It was very green. She watched as he lifted a glass full of juice to his mouth and gulped some down.

“How does it taste?” she wanted to know.

“Magnificent!” Eddie grinned. “I’d even call it a masterpiece!”

He extended the glass in her direction.

Marcy did not like the look of it, but now she was curious. She poured a little bit of the green liquid into a small glass took a tiny sip. It tasted a little like apple juice, and a little like grape juice.

“This is good,” she admitted. “What did you put in it to make it green and give it this flavor?”

“I have a secret ingredient,” Eddie smiled.

“What is it?” Marcy asked.

“If I told you, it wouldn’t be secret anymore, would it?”

Caterpillar Week

Cory woke up early that first morning at Aunt Kate’s house. The birds were making a racket quarreling outside his window, and he could not sleep while they argued. Cory went outside, where his aunt was in the potting shed cutting some pieces from a plant with an old pair of shears—one of her most treasured possessions.

“What’s that?” Cory asked her.

“Good morning! This is milkweed—that’s what my caterpillars eat,” she replied.

“Why do you raise caterpillars?” Cory asked.

“I enjoy it, and there are fewer butterflies and open areas for milkweed plants than there used to be. City life seems to be harming them, so by raising butterflies and the plants they eat, we can help protect these insects.”

Cory examined a group of black and green caterpillars that were consuming the milkweed leaves. “What else do they eat?” he asked.

“Nothing. Monarch butterflies only eat milkweed. I purchased the seeds and raised the plants, so I now have a supply of caterpillar food,” Aunt Kate said.

There were some greenish-blue capsules in one plastic enclosure. “What are those things?” Cory wanted to know.

“These are the chrysalises,” said Aunt Kate. “Each caterpillar makes a sticky liquid that dries to become a shell, and inside that shell a transformation takes place. In a few days, we’ll see what emerges from these.”

That week Cory took part in all kinds of butterfly farming activities. He helped his aunt feed the caterpillars and he watched the chrysalises. He enjoyed getting involved in butterfly farming.

One morning his aunt woke him, saying, “Today is the day.”

They hurried to the potting shed, where something amazing was happening. The chrysalises were breaking open! Out of each struggled an orange and black butterfly with its wings folded together. They crawled to the sticks in the enclosure and hung there until their wings were dry.

“They are on their way!” Aunt Kate beamed with happiness.

Does It Belong Here?

It is fun to walk through a garden blooming with beautiful flowers and plants. But did you know that one of the biggest problems in a garden can be the plants and flowers themselves? That is because some plants do not belong in that area. They might be just fine in the garden, but if they begin to sprout outside the garden they become a huge problem. This is because they are not native to that area. Native means being born in a certain place. Plants from somewhere else are called non-native plants.

How do these plants begin to grow where no one planted them? Sometimes seeds are carried on the wind. Sometimes people carry seeds without knowing it. That can happen when people go for a walk in the garden and pick up non-native seeds on their shoes or clothing. When they walk around outside the garden, the seeds fall into the soil. The seeds begin to grow, and soon there is a new plant in the neighborhood. Sometimes there can be huge clumps of this new plant.

Often, the new plant keeps growing and growing. It begins to take space away from the native plants. It also takes water from the native plants, and they can no longer get the things they need to live. Non-native plants have taken over entire fields this way. A field with native plants and flowers will have a lot of animal life. Birds and insects feed on the plants. In a field that has been taken over by a non-native plant, there will not be very many animals. The native animals need native plants to eat.

Non-native plants have become a big problem all over the world, and there has been a lot of research to learn more about controlling them. So think about planting only native plants in your garden. You will be doing your part to help the environment.

Getting Together, Making Things Better

On a beach just outside of town, children pick up trash. They are working in groups along with grownups. The workers sort bottles and cans into bags. Waste goes into other bags. They leave the beach much cleaner than they found it. The children talk and laugh as they do their job. They feel good about this work, which they do without pay.

At a nearby center, young teens are working, too. They teach younger children new skills. One volunteer shows children how to make plastic necklaces. Another is outside in the yard, directing a game of basketball. The young children are thrilled to have “big sisters” and “big brothers.” Their own families are busy, but here someone has time to play with them.

There is a park across town where other volunteers have gathered. They are planting flowers and pulling up weeds. If you take a tour of the park, you will see something exciting. Children of all ages are gardening. They are learning a useful skill that also helps keep the park green.

The people who live in this area, a community of caring people, all agree. This area was not always such a good place for children. There were not many volunteers. Children were often bored or lonely. Few people went to the park or the beach because these places did not look very inviting. Then one day a smart parent said, “Our families deserve a better place to live. We as a community are responsible for making things better.”

Volunteer groups were formed, and many people joined them. The leaders taught others what to do. When there was a job to do, people happily volunteered to get it done. Soon things were looking up.

You can get together with others in your school or neighborhood, too. Is there something that could be fixed or made better? Why not be a leader and form a group to do the job?

Closer to the Sky

David’s father was an airplane pilot. He was gone for days at a time, so David’s grandmother would come to David’s house while his mother was at work. David often felt lonely and bored. While Grandmother cooked, she watched the birds from the window and sketched them on a pad. Her eyes would go soft and dreamy.

Everyone had something to do that seemed important. But David had nothing special of his own.

“So make something that is your own,” Grandmother suggested. “What is it you would most like?”

“To be closer to the sky—and to Dad,” David said. That gave him an idea. He went to the garage and found a crate once used for storage. Now it was empty. He pulled the crate apart to separate the boards.

“What are you making?” his mother asked that evening.

“A tree house,” answered David.

“Good idea. You can build it in the oak tree in the yard. I’ll help you on Saturday.” As usual, Mom had a plan.

Grandmother made sketches of tree houses. David picked the design he liked best. He imagined the house already built. He would go there and gaze at the sky. It would be his own special place.

Saturday finally came. David and his mother made exact measurements of the wood and then sawed the boards. It was hard work, but David had great determination. The most difficult part was hammering the nails into the tree trunk. David and his mother ruined quite a few nails, but at last the tree house was safely joined to the tree.

“That’s a snug little house,” said his grandmother. “Is that a sketch pad in your pocket?”

David climbed up, feeling like the luckiest boy anywhere. Sunlight dappled the leaves. There went an airplane, humming like a giant bumblebee. David began to dream as he opened his sketch pad.

Closer to the Sky

David’s father was an airplane pilot. He was gone for days at a time, so David’s grandmother would come to his house while Mom was at work. David often felt lonely and bored. While Grandmother cooked, she watched the birds from the window. Later, she sketched them on a pad.

Everyone had something to do that seemed important. But David had nothing special of his own.

“So make something that is your own,” Grandmother said. “What is it you would most like?”

“To be closer to the sky—and to Dad.” That gave David the idea. He found a crate once used for storage. He pulled the crate apart to separate the boards.

“What are you making?” Mom asked.

“A tree house,” he said.

“Great!” she replied. “You can build it in the oak tree. I’ll help you on Saturday.” David could not wait to start.

Saturday came at last. It was hard work building the tree house, but David had great determination. They made exact measurements of the wood. They ruined a lot of nails hammering them into the tree trunk. At last the tree house was safely joined to the tree.

“That’s a snug little house,” said his grandmother. “Is that a sketch pad in your pocket?”

David climbed up, feeling like the luckiest boy anywhere. There went an airplane. It hummed like a giant bumblebee. David began to dream as he opened his sketch pad.

Aunt Sophie’s Gift

It was nearly Aunt Sophie’s birthday, and Anya had no money for a present. Aunt Sophie, who lived next door to Anya, said she did not care about gifts, but Anya was worried. Didn’t everyone love getting presents? Maybe Aunt Sophie was a little different from most people because she wrote poems and kept nine cats in her small apartment. But there must be some present she would like.

Mama had some suggestions: “Why don’t you knit her a scarf? Or bake a cake?”

“There is no time to knit!” Anya wailed. “Plus, Aunt Sophie does not like sweets,” she grumbled. She was getting upset. Then Anya had an idea: she would illustrate some of her aunt’s poems. Her drawing ability had blossomed since she started taking lessons. She thought she could do a good job.

Anya almost skipped down the sidewalk to Aunt Sophie’s house. “May I copy your poems?” she asked Aunt Sophie.

“Of course. I’m delighted that you like them,” Aunt Sophie said. She smiled and set a bowl of milk on the floor for the new kitten.

Anya hurried downstairs and began to read. What wonderful writing! The art would have to be good, too. Anya made many sketches before she opened the tubes of colorful paints. She wanted to capture the mood of each poem.

Finished at last, Anya bound the pages together with gold thread and made a cover. The book was complete.

On Friday, while Mama was cooking Aunt Sophie’s favorite dinner, Anya went upstairs alone. Aunt Sophie, dressed in a rainbow of colors, opened the door. A cat sat on her shoulder. The cats made sure Aunt Sophie was never lonesome.

“For me? Oh!” Slowly, Aunt Sophie began to turn the pages. Tears sparkled in her eyes.

Helping Each Other

Years ago, many people lived on farms. When a farmer had to build a barn, his neighbors would travel miles to go to the farm and help. This event was called a barn raising. The people worked together to build the barn, watch the children, and cook enough food for a big party. Everyone worked very hard, and in one or two days a sturdy new barn would be completed.

There are many reasons for people to labor so much to build another person’s barn. One reason is that the people were generous and kindhearted. So if a neighbor required help, the people nearby were willing to lend a hand. The help they gave was a gift. When there was hard work to be done, everyone knew it would be much easier, and would tend to go much faster, with a lot of assistance.

Aiding a neighbor produced positive feelings among people. Most people try to return a favor. So a man who helped a neighbor knew he could count on that neighbor to assist him at some time.

There was also a social aspect to a barn raising. Farm life was lonely and miles might have separated neighbors. Building a barn brought everyone together and gave them the company they yearned for. Old friends could chat, and young children had others their same age to run around and play with. New friendships would also be established, and sometimes people met their future husband or wife at a barn raising.

Years ago, this was how many towns were built. People worked together to produce buildings that everyone used, like a schoolhouse, a courthouse, or a city hall. It was one way that everyone could be a good neighbor, make a difference in their community, and help their town grow.

Today, in some places, people still help each other the same way. They get together, work hard, and help a neighbor raise a barn.
Directions: Fill in the circle next to the best answer.

Twenty-First-Century Cars

We probably could not live without cars and buses, but they cause problems by making the air dirty. Keeping the air clean is important, and air pollution can lead to health problems. Many people feel that the problem of pollution needs to be solved. Until recently, no option to a gas-powered car existed. Fortunately there are cleaner cars available now.

Some new cars do not run on gasoline and oil. Instead they use electricity. These cars are powered by a large battery. The first electric cars had some problems because the battery had to be charged quite often. That meant that the cars could not travel many miles without stopping. They were also expensive, so very few people bought these cars. Some people wanted clean cars, but they did not want a car that was not easy to use.

So engineers came up with another good idea. They made a car that uses both electricity and gasoline. This car, called a hybrid, uses less gasoline than most cars, so it runs more cleanly. It also uses a smaller battery than an electric car. Hybrids have been on the market in the United States since 1999. Some city buses also run on a combination of gas and electricity to help keep city air fresh.

The newest fuel efficient cars do not create pollution at all because they run on fuel cells. A man named Geoffrey Ballard began working on this idea in the 1980s. He worked on the plan for years. In 1999 he declared that his new car would travel up to 90 miles an hour and would not release pollution, only water. Ballard took an artist’s pride in this wonderful machine.

Some say that Ballard’s car is not perfect. It still creates waste that is unhealthy to breathe. So there will be many other experiments. One day someone will make the perfect car, but until then car makers will keep working on improving the cars we have.
Directions: Fill in the circle next to the best answer.

1. What does the apostrophe mean as it is used in the sentence below?

   The artist’s design of the car was very detailed.

21st Century Cars

We probably could not live without cars and buses, but they make the air dirty. Clean air is important. Air pollution can lead to health problems. Many people feel that this needs to change. Today, there are cleaner cars available.

Some cars do not run on gasoline and oil. Instead, they use electricity. These cars are powered by a large battery. The first electric cars were not easy to use. The battery had to be charged quite often. That meant they had to stop a lot. They cost a lot of money, too, so they did not sell well.

So engineers came up with another good idea. They made a car that uses both electricity and gasoline. This car is called a hybrid. It uses less gas than most cars. That makes it run cleanly. It also uses a smaller battery than an electric car. Hybrid cars have been for sale in the United States since 1999. Some city buses also run on both gas and electricity to help keep the air fresh.

The newest fuel efficient cars will not burn any fuel. They will run on fuel cells. A man named Geoffrey Ballard worked on this idea in the 1980s. In 1999, he declared his new car ran up to 90 miles an hour and used much less gas. Ballard took an artist’s pride in his new machine.

Some say that Ballard’s car is not perfect. It still causes waste that is not good to breathe. So there will be more experiments before fuel cells power our cars. One day, someone will make the perfect car. Until then, car makers will keep working on improving the cars we have.
Directions: Fill in the circle next to the best answer.

1. What does the apostrophe mean as it is used in the sentence below?
   The artist’s design of the car was very detailed.
   A  More than one artist created the design.
   B  The artist created the design.
   C  It is a contraction for artist is.
   D  The artist created the car.

2. Which word could BEST replace declared in the sentence below?
   “This is the best car in the world,” the engineer proudly declared.
   A  shouted
   B  questioned
   C  whispered
   D  announced

3. Which words BEST complete the sentence below?
   Hybrid _______ cause less pollution because the _______ batteries save fuel.
   A  cars, cars
   B  car’s, cars’
   C  cars’, cars’
   D  cars, cars’
4. Which of the following statements is a fact?
   A. The car is not perfect.
   B. Some new cars do not run on gasoline and oil.
   C. One day someone will make the perfect car.
   D. It is a wonderful machine.

5. Which of the following statements is an opinion?
   A. Electric cars are powered by a battery.
   B. Some buses use electricity and gasoline.
   C. The latest cars run on fuel cells.
   D. Keeping the air clean is important.

6. Is the first sentence of this passage a fact or an opinion? Explain how you know.
7. Which word in the sentence below is a possessive pronoun?

He was impatient with those who did not see the beauty of his perfect machine.

A) he  C) who
B) those  D) his

8. Which word can take the place of the underlined word in the sentence below?

Cindy’s idea was to buy a new car that would run cleanly, and she spoke with us about her plan.

A) she  B) her  C) hers  D) she’s

Use the paragraph below to answer question 9.

(1) His new car is terrific. (2) Its engine runs on gas and electricity. (3) It uses less gas than ours car. (4) The new design helps its engine run cleanly. (5) I would like a hybrid car of my own.

Old Pictures

Sam sat at the table, leafing through Grandma’s family album. The photographs were faded, and some were cracked with age.

“Who is this?” Sam said, pointing.

“That’s my father, and his name was Sam, too,” Grandma answered, smiling at some faraway image Sam could not see. All he saw was a small man in an odd-looking hat and a dark suit that looked too big.

“You wouldn’t think so by glancing at him, but my father was the image of a hero,” Grandma said.

“I thought he worked in a newspaper office,” Sam remembered.

“He did, when he came to the United States,” Grandma said.

“That was after the family fled Russia.”

“Why did they leave Russia?” Sam wondered.

“A terrible war was starting,” she said. “Some people didn’t want to believe it, but your great-grandpa sensed the danger. He had brothers and sisters, and he was the oldest. He had very little money, but he knew that the family had to escape to France, and from there to the United States.”

“So how did he manage that?” Sam asked.

“He sold everything the family owned to purchase train tickets. They quietly slipped out of town before dawn. There were people who did not want families to escape, but Grandpa and his family got to France,” Grandma said, and she shuddered as if she were numb with cold.

“Why did you shake like that, Grandma?” Sam asked as he embraced his grandmother.

“Your great-grandpa later found out that a week after the family’s flight, fighting had started and many people were killed,” she replied.

“He got his brothers and sisters out of there just in time,” Sam realized. “This picture of the whole family together is very special.”

“It is, Sam. It’s a special picture,” Grandma said.

The little man in the old photo seemed bigger now in Sam’s eyes.
Directions: Fill in the circle next to the best answer.

1. What does shuddered mean in the sentence below?
   The train to Paris shuddered and stopped.
   A The weather was too cold for the train to run.
   B The train shook like a frightened person.
   C The train was scared.
   D The train was late.

2. “My father was the image of a hero.” What does image mean in this sentence?
   A a photograph
   B a memory
   C an example
   D a mirror

Use the sentences below to answer question 3.

The people in the town wanted to escape the danger. Many of them fled to other countries.

3. What does escape mean in the sentences above?
   A move from
   B live in
   C get away
   D ask about
4. What might have happened if Great-grandpa and his family had tried to leave the Russian town a week later than they did?
   A. They might have been seriously hurt.
   B. They might not have taken a train.
   C. They might not have taken their bags.
   D. They might have decided to stay at home.

5. How will Sam MOST likely think of his great-grandfather now that he knows the whole story?
   A. He will consider him a stubborn man.
   B. He will consider him an imaginary figure.
   C. He will consider him a real hero.
   D. He will consider him a frightening person.

6. What kind of life do you think Sam’s great-grandfather might have had if he had not escaped Russia? Base your answer on details from the story.

The Busy Home of Honeybees

Honeybees are interesting creatures. For example, these able architects build special nests. In the wild a nest can contain up to 20,000 bees, but a hive built by farmers can contain as many as 80,000 busy insects. The honeybees live and work in these structures, which are made of combs. The honey that you spread on your toast comes from these combs.

The combs are built of flat walls made up of many shallow, six-sided cells. The comb has two sides, with cells on each side. All the cells are exactly the same size and are evenly spaced. The spacing between cells depends on what their side of the shelter will be used for.

One part of the nest, where the queen bee lays her eggs, is called the brood comb. That is where the young bees are raised. On the other side of the nest, the bees store honey and pollen.

There are different kinds of honeybees, but all of the bees work together to keep the nest running smoothly. To begin with the nurse bees feed the newborn bees “royal jelly.” When the babies grow up the male bees are called drones. They mate with the queen bee, who makes more bees. That is the queen’s only job, but it is an important one.

Another kind of bee in the nest is the worker bee. They have important jobs. For example they gather pollen and bring it back to the nest for food and to produce beeswax. They also help control the temperature of the nest. The house bees are another kind of bee. They build the comb by using their mouths to form wax into cells.

Many bees are needed in a nest to keep the colony alive and well. Scientists study these creatures to understand how they work so well in groups. Because the bees are so organized, they can survive in many climates. Perhaps people can learn something from the honeybees’ example.
Directions: Fill in the circle next to the best answer.

1. Architects are to rooms as bees are to
   - A combs.
   - B honey.
   - C wax.
   - D houses.

2. As it is used in the passage, what does the word structures refer to?
   - A cells
   - B nests

   - C They show parts of a whole.
   - D They show cause and effect.
4. In the first paragraph, the author describes honeybees as interesting. Which fact about honeybees does he use to support this?
   A. The comb is where the bees store honey and pollen.
   B. Worker bees help control the temperature of the nest.
   C. Honeybees are architects that build special nests.
   D. The honeybees live and work in their nests.

5. Which sentence describes an important detail that helps you picture and remember a honeycomb?
   A. These able architects build special nests.
   B. House bees use their mouths to form wax into cells.
   C. The honey that you spread on your toast comes from these combs.
   D. The honeycombs are built of flat walls.

Good Neighbors

Mr. and Mrs. Winter had lived in the yellow house on the corner for over 50 years. Dad said the Winters were once lively people who raked leaves, shoveled snowy sidewalks, and chatted with everyone who passed by. But lately nobody had seen much of either of our good neighbors.

So one chilly day in February, Dad paid the older couple a visit. When he returned he looked worried, and I heard him tell Mom, “Their roof is leaky, and most of their kitchen appliances need to be fixed. I’m going to bring a crew over there tomorrow and get some things done.”

Dad works in construction and knows how to do building repairs. I figured he would do a great job, and I asked my parents if I could help out as well.

“Good idea, Jim,” Mom said. “I left the Winters a plate of cookies last week, but I never thought to look around the place.”

Bright and early the next day, Dad went downtown to get his equipment. He came back with a small crew, and they got right to work. After school I went over to the Winters’ house. Dad and Harry showed me how to patch the kitchen floor with new tiles. Will and Sal were up on the roof fixing the leak. Greg, a whiz with machinery, had already found out what was wrong with the stove and was fitting the new parts.

Mr. Winter could not stop thanking everyone, and Mrs. Winter made plates of sandwiches for the crew. “I’d love to cook a hot meal,” she said. “When this stove is mended, I’ll do just that. You’ll all come for dinner, won’t you?” Her green eyes sparkled as she said, “This is about the best thing that has happened in a long time.”

You know, I felt the same way.

A Lesson Learned

There once lived a rich man named Katu, who thought that everything he owned was better than everything that anyone else owned. He only wanted the best.

One day he decided to build a new home. It would be made of tall logs, and of course Katu was soon boasting that his logs were the best money could buy.

To move the logs, Katu hired a man who owned an elephant named Lago, the strongest elephant anyone had ever seen. While Lago piled the logs higher and higher to make the house, Katu stood nearby, having a conversation with two other men, and soon he was boasting that his house was going to be the best house in town.

But Katu did not know that there was something very special about Lago aside from his amazing strength. Lago understood every word that Katu was saying. And as Katu continued to boast, Lago decided that he had heard enough.

Katu was still boasting when one of the men interrupted him by pointing wildly over his shoulder. Annoyed, Katu turned around. In the next moment, he forgot all about boasting.

Lago was coming straight at him! The others quickly scrambled out of the way, but Katu was too amazed to move. Before he knew it, Lago seized the unlucky man in his trunk, lifted him high in the air, and was soon standing right next to Katu’s almost-finished house.

Holding Katu so that he looked down at his new house, Lago bumped into it hard. The house began to sway, then collapsed in a heap of logs. Then Lago set Katu gently on the ground.

It took Katu weeks to rebuild his house. But he learned his lesson. From that day on, he never uttered another boast.

A Special Kind of House

In the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, the United States was changing. People were coming from many countries, and most of these immigrants did not speak English. They did not automatically understand life in their new country. They needed help, but where could they turn? So, to meet the needs of these people, settlement houses were created.

In these houses, or centers, people could get sympathy and help. Workers explained the requirements for getting a job and going to school. New immigrants could learn a trade. They could get help finding jobs or take English, music, and painting classes. Everyone was welcome.

The centers became popular. By 1918 there were 400 of them in the United States. Jane Addams and Ellen Starr were two center workers who helped people. They opened Hull House in Chicago. At Hull House they taught people about books and art, and they opened a preschool.

Addams and Starr also wanted to help women get the right to vote. But not everyone thought this was the right thing to do. It was a matter of dispute at that time. But women could only take an active part in a democracy if they voted.

Lillian Wald wanted to help the poor living in New York City’s Lower East Side. Consequently, Wald started the Henry Street Settlement House there. This historical house is still open and it is famous for its art and music classes.

There are many settlement houses today. Sometimes they are called neighborhood centers. The centers still offer classes, and some have gyms and pools. Many of these centers are started to help all people, not just immigrants, with their problems. They work with the ill and help people without homes. Some give meals to the hungry and care for children. All of them offer something special.

Charles Dickens: More than a Great Writer

Charles Dickens is a famous writer. He wrote about what life was like in England many years ago. He also created some of our most famous story characters.

Dickens was born in 1812. His family moved to London when he was two years old. Many stories written at the time were set in the sleepy villages of the English countryside. But Dickens set many of his stories in London. As you read his books, you can imagine him getting story ideas as he strolled the city’s busy streets. He must have seen many characters as he walked slowly along.

His family was poor, and when he was 12 he had to get a job. He worked in a factory pasting labels on bottles. As a young man, Dickens worked as a newspaper reporter. He became famous as a writer when he was only 24 years old. His official name was Charles Dickens, but he sometimes wrote under the name of Boz.

Dickens wrote 20 novels as well as many other books. One novel, Oliver Twist, is the story of an orphan. In this book Dickens wrote about the pitiful conditions orphans faced. He showed how badly poor people were treated in England.

In another story, A Christmas Carol, Dickens wrote about a mean man who treats everyone around him badly. He later accepts his mistakes with grace and becomes a caring person.

By writing about things like this, Dickens helped people realize that some things were not fair. People were being treated poorly. Some of his books inspired people to try to make the world a better place. That is one way writers can help change the world.

Charles Dickens died in 1870. Today he is regarded as one of our most popular writers.

Family Living

Children do not always get along with their brothers and sisters. Quarreling is a fact of life. But sometimes there is too much fighting. The fighting begins harming the relationships that family members share.

Children often fight over possessions. When a family is large, sharing is important, but everyone wants to protect what is theirs. It can be very difficult to share a possession you like a lot. A child may become jealous of something a brother or sister purchased. Often the parents have to get involved in these arguments.

Sometimes a younger child wants to do what the older ones do. Older children usually get to try things first. Parents tell the younger child that his or her turn will eventually come. But the wait is sometimes too long for the child. Parents may have to let the youngster learn the lesson on his or her own. This keeps the younger child from being angry with his or her parents or being jealous of the older child.

Grandparents or other older relatives may come to live with a family. When this happens, it is often hard for everyone to get along at first. The grandparent is not used to living with so many people anymore. The young children are not used to having another adult in the house. And their parents have to adjust to life with their own mom or dad again. It can be stressful for everyone.

Living in a family can be a chore! But family members supply support and love for each other in a way that cannot be replaced. The next time you get in a fight with family members, think about how they have helped you before. Think about a time when they have beamed with happiness at a favor you did for them. Try to capture again the feeling that it gave you. The anger or hurt you feel will disappear.

Scoring Instructions

Using the Student Evaluation Charts

After each Weekly Assessment there is a Student Evaluation Chart. It lists all of the skills covered and the number of the question that assesses each skill.

- In the column labeled “Number Correct,” fill in the number of questions answered correctly for each skill. Count the total number of correct responses, and write the number for each subtest above the total possible score.
- Add the scores for each skill (number of items answered correctly) to determine the total test score.
- To convert these raw test scores to percentages, see the Scoring Chart on the inside of the back cover of this book.

Multiple-choice questions are worth one point each, and the constructed-response question is worth two points. There is a two-point Holistic Scoring Rubric on the Student Evaluation Chart to help you score the constructed-response question.

Evaluating the Scores

The primary focus of the Weekly Assessment is to measure student progress toward mastery of each skill. Scores that fall below the 80th percentile suggest that students require additional instruction before mastery of that skill can be achieved.

Evaluating the results of this assessment provides specific information about students’ daily instructional needs. We recommend that you use these results for instructional planning and reteaching opportunities. Compare these results with your own observations of students’ work and identify objectives that still need reinforcement. Incorporate these into your instructional plans for the coming week for individual, small group, or whole group instruction as indicated.
